

Sociology is the study of society. The study of how humans interact with each other. What they believe in, what their so-called hobbies are, and what that makes them to themselves and others. They fit into categories and that makes them unique and common humanity. We all have characteristics that make us fit in with one another and ones that make us stand out. It just depends on what you choose for yourself in terms of how you are socialized. They are there for categorized through school, family, friends, sports, social media, religion, etc.

Judgment is a trait that all of us come with. This is to say that when we look at someone on the street and immediately decide where they fit in. this is based mostly on what they're wearing and what they look like. If you saw a young lady stepping out of a limousine with a Birkin bag in one hand and the newest iPhone in the other, she had on Christian Louboutin pumps and a nice dress you would most likely think that she had a lot of money and was confident. I know that I would immediately be jealous, but you don't know what is going on in their head. What is happening in their family could be a nightmare. I suppose what I am trying to say is that what you look like to others is not all that makes you, you.

Media is a huge part of what socializes us. Most everyone has at least one facebook, Instagram, or snapchat. I have heard my mom say quite a few times to not post anything that I will regret later in life because when finding a job the people I am looking to work for will look at my social media. My dad, on the other hand, has had no social media whatsoever for his whole entire life. He just got his real estate license and his mentor is saying that he needs to make an Instagram and Facebook account for publicity. This leads me to believe that social media is a thing that needs to be dealt with responsibly but you need it for publicity. It's a responsibility that needs a higher status.
